

Don't Bet Against Love

She was raised a gentlewoman. A true blooded debutante.

Privileged to Daddy's money. Ate in all the best restaurants.

And he was just a hired hand. Sweatin' back breakin' work for his pay.

And if you knew them you would never bet that they might even meet one day.

She saw in him a gentle spirit, unlike anyone she'd ever known.

He saw in her a frightened child, surrounded by people and yet so alone.

Before long love had found a way. How it happened even they don't know.

But they're together lovin' every day. Ain't it funny how life goes.

There ain't no mountain too high that they can't rise above.

And though you might want to try, don't bet against love.

There ain't no mountain too high that they can't rise above.

And though you might want to try, don't bet against love.

Don't bet against love.
